

BACHELOR OF CRIMINAL SCIENCE

FORENSIC PSYCHOLOGY

If you want to be involved in criminal investigations or work to help offenders, the Tiffin University's forensic psychology program is right for you. Our program is structured to be two degrees in one. We'll provide you with a solid foundation in criminal justice and psychology – and our experienced forensic psychologists will show you how the two intersect.

The field of forensic psychology is both dynamic and growing - making it explicitly undefined, yet exciting - and you have an opportunity to earn your degree through a program that was established before the American Psychology Association even identified it as a registered program.

Our program is unique in that you'll take courses in criminal justice, forensic psychology, psychology and sociology - in fact, you'll take 10 courses that show the connections of these respective areas to law and criminal justice issues. This will open doors to a variety of opportunities for employment in mental health, social service and criminal justice settings. You'll develop knowledge in the treatment of offenders, victimology, crisis intervention, counseling, psychopathology, personality assessment and research methods. You'll also study the application of psychological principles to the resolution of problems in the administration of criminal justice, such as jury selection, police stress and rehabilitation program design.
