

BACHELOR OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE IN CORRECTIONS

What is Corrections?

Corrections is a vital profession within the criminal justice system that focuses on the rehabilitation, supervision and management of individuals who have been convicted of crimes. As a corrections professional, the role involves working in various settings, such as jails, detention centers, prisons, probation departments and parole agencies. Responsibilities would include ensuring the safety and security of both staff and inmates, implementing rehabilitation programs aimed at reducing recidivism and maintaining order within the facility. This career path demands strong communication and interpersonal skills, as graduates will be interacting with individuals from diverse backgrounds and dealing with a wide range of situations. If a student is interested in pursuing a career in corrections, they will play a crucial role in promoting rehabilitation and societal reintegration, contributing to public safety and the overall functioning of the criminal justice system.

Why study Corrections?

At TU, the major is structured to give students a sufficient background in legal issues, management, history, social work and counseling that effectively augment the knowledge and skills that develop in the criminal justice core curriculum. A strong emphasis is placed on providing the latest perspectives on offender reentry, population management strategies, offender motivation, theory and policy that will provide students with the requisite educational foundation to effect positive outcomes in offender management.

- TU's corrections program is a unique major, as very few schools offer this specialization.
- Students will study with full-time faculty with professional experience and certifications in corrections, and adjunct faculty who are current practitioners.
- Offering a mix of general criminal justice classes and specific corrections courses, the major gives a comprehensive view of corrections. Students will also get tour correctional facilities and hear from guest speakers who are working professionals in the field.
- Courses let students focus on key issues in institutional and community corrections and offender reentry.
- TU's network of alumni in corrections provides flexibility for employment.
- A 150-hour internship in the field is a required part of the curriculum, often leading to a foot in the door to a first job.
- TU partners with The Washington Center Internship Program, which can provide a unique opportunity to intern with federal agencies in Washington D.C.
